Parnell, challenges the representative of The Times to connect his clients with the agitation in Ireland.

The Attorney General, Sir R. E. Webster, counsel for The Times, promised that he would endeavor to avoid calling any unnecessary evidence.

Captain Bycott, from whose name the town of Bycott, Ireland, was named, was examined before the Times-Parnell Commission to-day.

LONDON, Dec. 13.—Buckle, a well-known Radical, gave evidence before the Times-Parnell Commission to-day. He testified and swore that he was ordered to shoot a man named Roche, who was expelled from the Irish National League. He attempted, but failed. He was afterwards paid 50s. to facilitate his escape.

Mr. George Brudenell, Warden of Exeter College, Oxford, has been ordered to attend the Commission, for comparing Michael Davitt to a Whitechapel murderer.

DISASTERS ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

LOUISIANA, 24 Dec.—A Mississippi river steamer took fire near Memphis. She had two hundred passengers on board, a panic broke out amongst them, and many of them leaped into the river, thirty of them losing their lives. The pilot succeeded in putting the steamer ashore on the east of the point where the fire broke out, and the passengers and the crew got off safely.

Another Mississippi steamer has been burned; of a hundred persons who were on board, thirty were burned to death, sixty were drowned, and only ten were saved.

APPEAL IN SERBIA.

LONDON, 24 Dec.—The Radical Party in Serbia have obtained large majorities in the Great Skupstina, or National Assembly, insist that King Milan must either submit to their demands or retire from the throne. There are doubts as to the loyalty of the King. The Legislature has passed a bill refunding the taxation exacted for war purposes.

London, Dec. 13.—Russian agents in Serbia are inciting the deposition of King Milan, who is the son of the late King Alexander, who reigned under the Government in the name of the heir-apparent, Prince Alexander, who is 12 years old.

24th Dec.—Prince Milan of Serbia, who was fully prepared to abdicate, was agreed to by the establishment of the Radicals members for his ease in preparing the new constitution.

26th Dec.—Prince Milan of Serbia has executed an act of abdication to be used in case of emergency.

BOULANGISM.

London, 20th Dec.—M. de Lacombe, made a brilliant attack in the Chamber of Deputies on the French Government, and charged them with creating Boulangism by their supineness in not adopting drastic measures for dealing with the movement.

21st Dec.—The Chamber in reply said that the Government were watching General Boulanger's manoeuvres to secure the dictatorship, but that he would be prevented, even if they were compelled to resort to to subordinate his designs.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.—The prorogation of Parliament has been perfunctory. The prorogation speech respects rather the Flanders dispute with the United States than yet been settled. The condition of Egyptian affairs is considered. The position of affairs in the Indian Empire is stated to be tranquil and prosperous.

RUSSIAN DESIGNS ON AFRICA.—Russia has laid an embargo on Abyssinian arms, and is threatening to occupy the littoral districts, as Russia intends to assert her right to territory on the East African coast.

A "GRANDE PASSION."

ITS RISE, DECLINE, AND FALL.

A NOVELLETTE.

(Extracts from a Lady's Diary.)

May 20th, 1888.—Have been married just two years to-day. Heigho! Can't think why I married Sir William, except that I was twenty-eight and that he was the only man in London who did not know of my father's death and Lord J. Hear F.'s wife's death and he himself has got into another scrape and called to Kansas or Kanabatie—could not catch the name of the place. I didn't care much for him really. I have yet to meet the man capable of inspiring in me a really great passion. I am sure I could do a great deal for love—love as Bernhard plays it; it would be so delightfully exciting. But "Cherchez l'homme." Modern men, at least in my set, have no romances in them.

Went to the usual dead-end dinner-party—legal lights and scientific logics and dandy women. One of the outside the house without having Sir W.'s great speech thrown at me, and being congratulated on being the wife of —, the dullest bore in London.

Sat up reading "Le Femme de Pelephore"—charming—so racy! Have written to the library for "Le Serpent de Notre Temps," "L'Amant de la Comtesse," and "Monsieur Lucresse d'aujourd'hui."

Shall be thirty to-morrow. But I don't look it, and I don't mean to.

May 25th.—Met the singer Rudolph L. and several actors at a supper at Mrs. H. S. They all recited and sang, and were very amusing.

What delightful, spontaneous creatures these actors are! I never met any of them before, and am simply charmed with them. They seem to enjoy life so thoroughly, travelling from place to place, poets and fated, bound by no ill-circumstances, all sunshine and romance, liberty and excitement—not a dull or tiresome moment in their existence.

Rudolph L. is simply divine! Tall, with a magnificent figure, long southern eyes, olive skin, slight mustache, and curly dark hair. To hear him sing a love song is absolutely thrilling! He refused all entreaties to sing again until I asked him.

"For you I will do it, Lady F.!"

I gave him a flower from my dress when I left. I am going to hear him sing at Lady R.'s concert to-morrow.

June 20th.—Have met Rudolph L. five times at different houses where he has been singing. All the women in London are in love with him.

Sir William is going out of town to bore the people in his shirt with speeches, so Lily and I are going to get some more little suppers—a few of these amusing artistic people and Rudolph. Poor fellow! he watches me about everywhere, really makes me something about him, didn't think anything could now. I believe he adores me. Sent him a little note round to the theatre, by Marie's reference to what he said to me on the stairs at Mme. de P.'s about Swinburne's verses.

This sort of thing is so new, after stale drawing-room flirtations, that it's positively exciting.

June 27th.—Had tea with Rudolph at his rooms. Very prettily furnished. Quite idyllic! He sang "exquisitely, thrillingly" his very soul, whilst I ate bon-bons and felt like a queen. Lily H. drove me to the door, and called for me afterwards to go on to the theatre and hear him sing. I believe all this time I have had a soul without knowing it. I feel I could make any sacrifice for Rudolph.

Told him the story of my life. He shed tears over my loveless union. I said my people forced me into it, which wasn't quite true, though papa was certainly very glad to get me off his hands. R.'s mother is an Italian of noble blood—the Mallone family. I think he said, "I shall have to be an Italian of noble blood." Only an Italian knows how to make love. Sir William is English jusqu'au bout des ongles.

Delightful experience—sentiment trembling on the borders of passion. I have promised to be a sister to him.

July 6th.—Feel as if I could fly to the end of the world with R. Am nearly crazy. I mean for an artist's life, for its restlessness, excitement, and intoxicating triumphs. Remember what an immense success I made when I played Lady Teazle at Lady M.'s for the charity two years ago. Heigho! Fate has decided I am to be the wife of a grey political baronet instead. Sir William returned this morning. Someone has sent him an anonymous letter, and he actually inquired, "What news about my name being coupled with that of an attitudinizing end of a comic opera singer?" We had a scene, which was a pleasant excitement in our usual humdrum ménage, and he has forbidden me to speak to Rudolph again. Now I shall have to exercise a little finesse, and it will be quite interesting. Life is much fuller and more interesting when one is absorbed in a "grande passion."

July 21st.—The most frightful scene with Sir W. "Tant pis, tant pis!"

Who would have thought that little vulgar Marie would betray me, and that Sir W. would intercept my notes to R., and to pay my people to spy upon me?

Nothing is too low for husbands and waiting-maids!

And I, all the while so innocent—compared to all the women I know—and enjoying a friendship so romantic, so ennobling.

Sir William declares he will get a divorce, and I have seldom known him to break his word except in political speeches.

Rudolph is in the one great position of my life, but it is too trying that Sir W. should find it out.

However, all this puts some excitement into life, and if the case goes against me I shall be a martyr; if in favour of me, a heroine.

March 3rd.—I always thought it such a mistake of Mrs. L. W. to wear a conspicuous blue velvet dress and smart hat in her divorce case. I am sure such a gown prejudices the public mind against one. Black, in aggressively mournful. Have ordered a lovely silver-grey, with a bounce and great velvet mantle, which, with grey suede gloves, will be once dovelike and distinguished, and produce just the right effect.

March 16th.—One would really think my servants to be persons of independent means, from the time they appear to have spent at keyholes and windows, watching things that didn't happen! I had no idea a lower order possessed so much. I was a bit of a mistake not to give them the black silk.

The whole affair is very exciting. Have had heaps of anonymous letters and several tracts.

One's own letters give quite a wrong impression when read aloud in court—just like everybody else's, too. But it does help the effort for people to laugh right through them.

My own self is a most charming man, well-bred and witty. He and I and Lily have the most delightful little Bohemian lunches and teas.

I almost wish dear Rudolph would not attend to me so much in court, though.

March 20th.—The whole thing is over, after the most heartily prejudiced summary by that wicked old judge (who is an intimate friend of Sir W.'s) Lily H. has embraced me and congratulated me on being free—with only a beggarly £200 a year to dress up in!

I feel as if I should be a martyr, but now that I shall have to marry him, somehow the romance seems peeling off him. He will boast of his acquaintance with the most extraordinary people—swindlers, baronets, French counts (by purchase), and widows (of French noblemen).

He actually told me this case had injured his position! His position? In good heavens! What has it done to mine! I, who have sacrificed everything for him (although I did not in the least mean to). He says he will have to take country engagements until the thing has blown over.

I shall be very glad to leave London myself, as all the most really bad among my friends in town (about whom I know the worst stories) have the impudence to cut me, and odious men I used to snub have grown quite detestably familiar, and almost smile at me!

Nonetheless 30th.—Horrid little wedding in the fog and rain in a fearful back-street church. Were a lovely fawn-coloured gown, and spoil it against the muddy wheel of the wretched cab! Took us to the station. Monsieur D. Ce que l'on souffre pour l'amour!

I'm afraid dear Rudolph is rather mean about money matters. He will "alterate" with cabmen and porters so conspicuously. January 24th.—The life here is intolerably dreary, dragging along from one horrible dirty town to another with a set of ill-mannered men, and phlegmatically. The "chorus" is a crowd of absurd young fellows, with candy heads and extravagant clothes, who glare at me as though I were a specimen in a case; and the bass and baritone wives and the "principal ladies" are the most depressing, narrow-minded, gossip-gossip set of people I ever met, and seem to have no ideas beyond their parts and their lodgings.

No excitement, no society, no amusement, and Rudolph thinking of nothing but himself and his voice and his beauty and his meals from morning till night!

I shall die from ennui!

Had a letter from Lily, in which envies me for having "cast off the shackles of conventionality, and started on a life of love and freedom with the man of my heart!"

Sho-ya, a "grande passion" is indeed the only thing worth living for!

I wish she'd try it!

January 30th.—Am thoroughly sick of R.'s vanity and self-indulgence. He practices before the looking-glass by the hour, and actually had the impudence to tell me yesterday that he "could have done a great deal better, as a soprano singer, earning £25 a week was dying of love for him, and that he only married me because his sense of honour was so strong!"

The whole place is strewn with the imbecile and disgraceful letters he gets from women who can't even spell. These he reads aloud to me, by way of entertaining me, when he is tired of talking about his precious voice, which he considers far more important than anything in creation, myself included.

I am really beginning to hate the sight of him.

Feb. 12th.—Last week R. sent for his mother to keep house for him, as he "did not get that attention to his comforts he had a right to expect from a wife," and to-day she has arrived, the Italia of high birth, one of the noble Mallone family!

She is very fat and common and Irish, and her name is Maloney. She is always hugging Rudolph, and she makes a considerable noise when she eats. She calls Rudolph "Bobby" and me "my lady."

She is the last nail in the coffin of romance!

Feb. 17th.—Sir William has married again—a dowdy cousin, who used to play my accompaniments and admire his speeches! To think that she will wear the F. diamonds—my diamonds!—and drive in my carriage, and ride my horses—and wear my clothes! This is too much for me. I shall think of all this, and to remember how, with all his tedious political orations, Sir William was extremely indulgent and took a proper pride in me, and then to consider the way in which I am now treated—treated about as a trophy just as a savage flourishes a scalp, to prove how glorious and irresistible a creature the conqueror of all this makes me feel; nearly frantic! I feel as if I could take an overdose of chloral or go into a nunnery.

Feb. 20th.—Went again to St. — church. Stayed after the service, and had a long talk with a charming old priest—quite the most well-bred man I have met for an age. Believe I have a great deal of religion in me that has never been properly cultivated. Went to confession. Very soothing. I am sure nobody can repent more heartily than I. Rudolph and his mother together are enough to make anybody report. To see him trying smiles before a hand-glass and to hear her saying soup is enough to turn a Nicon de l'Enfer into a saint.

Begin to feel it is my turn to leave him.

March 1st.—Went for a drive after lunch. Came home, unexpectedly, and found R. sitting in the same chair with a young person in a pink cotton frock and a saffron jacket, while his horrible old mother sat opposite, grinning at the pair like an imbecile. Cheek me! They were amusing themselves over some ill-bred jokes about "my lady."

My appearance broke up this charming circle, and on my gentle remonstrating "Bobby" had the good taste to inform me his visitor was a delightful girl, and that he wished he had married her instead of "throwing himself away out of pity on a woman he had never cared two straws about."

I reminded the wretch of his devotion, &c., and he declared he had been "morally fascinated, as any man would be, when a good-looking woman of fashion threw herself at his head in such an evident fashion!"

Throw herself at his head!

I thought I should have a fit with mortification and disgust, but I conquered my feelings and uttered the words, the victim, my beautiful and unworthy creature, which I thought of him, and to inform him I should no longer put up with such an intolerable existence.

He said if I wanted to go, the sooner the better, but that he would be disturbed by my going, as emotion was bad for his voice!

And by the next post I got a paper, sent on to me by somebody in town, with a paragraph underlined, which stated that the well-known and very pretty woman who, about a year ago, publicly sacrificed her rank and position for the sake of his ten years of one of our handsomest tenors is now happily married to him and enjoying a prolonged honeymoon in the north of England.

I took it up with a few dozen of R.'s photographs, and left them in the tender way I packed my trunks while R. was at the theatre.

I imagined that he would be capable of some slight sentiment towards the woman who had risked and lost everything for him, so on my way downstairs to order a cab I peeped through the sitting-room door.

R. and his mother were enjoying a supper of trout and whisky, and haggling with the landlady over a trifling bill!

The death-thud of love is "How could I!" I have said it a dozen times a day for the last two months.

Enfin, "Où va grande passion!"

I shall either enter a nunnery or go on the stage.
